

ABSTRACT

A portable data collection system is described for the statistical collection of patient medical data that is useful to track medical outcomes. The system provides a means to determine medical outcomes by combining patient and physician input collected by handheld equipment. The data is transmitted to a central location. Patient medical outcomes can be readily recorded and observed without manual re-entry of collected data.